

Advanced certification in French language (DALF)

Presentation

All the tests have been designed within the action orientated approach of the Common European Framework of Reference for Languages, which defines the users of a language as social actors needing to accomplish tasks (which are not only language related) in a given environment and circumstances, within a specific, personal, public, educational or professional area.

These exams rely on the knowledge, expertise, interpersonal skills and learning ability that lie within the skills of communicating linguistically, sociolinguistically and pragmatically. The application of this skill in the carrying out of varied language activities may involve understanding, expression, interaction and mediation.

This outline has shaped the creation of exams that therefore, for each level, systematically come under the four skills, giving, depending on the levels, a greater or lesser significant place to interaction and mediation. A mark greater than or equal to 50/100 is required to obtain the diploma.
